HISTORY OF THE LABOR INTERPRETIVE CENTER

The proposal to build a Minnesota Labor Interpretive Center began in 1984 when Governor Rudy Perpich announced the idea at the Minnesota AFL-CIO annual convention. Perpich appointed David Roe, president emeritus of the Minnesota AFL-CIO, to head a task force to plan a new interpretive center affiliated with the Minnesota Historical Society. In 1985, a $228,000 state appropriation was made to the Department of Administration to "plan and design the Labor History Center" [Laws 1986 1spsess c15 sec3 subd4f].

In 1993, the Center was separated from the Minnesota Historical Society. The Minnesota Labor Interpretive Center, Inc., a non-profit corporation authorized in the creating legislation, was formed with its own board of directors to advise the Center and engage in fundraising on its behalf. The ten directors were to be representatives of labor, business, state and local government, local education authorities, and arts groups and were appointed by the governor, the mayor of St. Paul, the speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Subcommittee on Committees of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration [Laws 1993 c369 sec60].

Of primary importance to the Center was the preservation and interpretation of the story of the workers and their institutions in Minnesota [Laws 1986 c3 art4 sec8]. In addition, the Center was to spur an interest among the people of Minnesota in family and community traditions of work; help young people discover their work skills and opportunities for a productive working life; and advance the teaching of work and labor studies in schools and colleges. Not intended as a conventional museum or research library, the Center was to achieve these goals through exhibits, audio-visual programs, educational programs, theatrical presentations, seminars, conferences and symposia.

The Center was to be a state-of-the-art structure featuring exhibit galleries, educational facilities, and a theater. Several options for site locations were considered, but in 1995 it was decided that the Center would be constructed in the East Building of the former Science Museum of Minnesota complex in St. Paul. The 1998 legislative session approved six million dollars for the renovation of the East Building, with a projected completion date of December 2001 [Laws 1998 c404 sec13 subd5].

However, the Center suffered a severe setback when at the completion of the 1999 legislative session, Governor Jesse Ventura used the line item veto on two bills containing appropriations for the Center. Although still statutorily alive, the Center was, as of July 2000, not active.

SCOPE AND CONTENTS OF THE RECORDS

The files contain organizational materials, including incorporation documents, mission statements, board of director and task force lists, and affirmative action plans; minutes of board of director meetings and workshops, committee meetings, and site planning meetings; subject files; and publications.

The subject files, which include correspondence, newspaper clippings, and background materials, document planned exhibits, pledges, and relations with various architectural firms, the University of Minnesota, and the Minnesota Historical Society. They also include correspondence of Board Chair David Roe.

The publications are mainly studies and reports documenting proposed programs, exhibits, and sites for the Center, particularly the proposed 1999 move into the vacated Science Museum of Minnesota building in St. Paul. They also document the Center's relations with the Capital Area Architectural and Planning Board, the exhibit planning firm Charnell, the city of St. Paul, and the Great American History Theatre. Included are an undated Minnesota labor history map, a 1999 proposed exhibit on automobile manufacturing in Minnesota, and an undated two-volume history of organized labor in Minnesota.
