Beaver pelts for blankets

Fur posts were in isolated areas, but they were linked to a worldwide trade network. Beaver pelts were shipped from North America to London, where they were made into hats. And in return, goods ranging from British blankets to Italian beads to North African ostrich plumes were shipped to North America for trading with American Indians.